

How to play

Role-playing in groups:

Each group draws a card and discusses role-playing.

Then the role play is played in each group.

It is important that everyone speaks in an appreciative manner.

Everyone discusses the role-play together after the performances.

There is feedback and ideas on what else could be done differently.

One team member made an important contribution to the project work.

You would like to give him feedback.

One group member contributed a lot to finding a solution in a team exercise.

You would like to give her feedback.

A colleague gave a presentation at work.

The presentation was not so good.

You now want to help him improve his presentation skills.

A friend is struggling to organize his time well. You want to help him plan his time better.

A friend has created something creative, for example:

- A work of art
- A piece of music

You think it's great. You want to tell her what you think.

A friend has improved personally.

He has overcome his fear.

And for the first time he spoke in front of several people.

You want to help him further boost his self-confidence.

A friend is an advocate for environmental protection.

And also for sustainability.

You want to thank him for his work.

A friend is interested in self-improvement.

He wants to develop further.

You want to help him describe the goals.

So that he achieves the goals well.